Skidmore, Owings & Merrill LLP

Dawveed Scully is a Senior Urban Designer at SOM in Chicago. Trained as an architect and urbanist, he is passionate about design as a tool of empowerment that encourages collaboration between local residents, stakeholders, and government for an equitable design outcome.

A visionary for the next generation of urban planners in the 21st century, Dawveed Scully is an emerging leader and advocate for new methods to engage and empower communities through impactful solutions. Besides contributing his expertise to two of the three urban planning projects that garnered 2017 ILASLA Awards for the firm, Scully has also recently represented SOM's City Design Practice at the third annual Anthology Architecture and Design Festival in Manila with a presentation on "Collaborating to Design the Just City," following the festival's theme of social architecture.

Whether discussing how SOM's Chicago office partners with local nonprofit centers and municipalities or leading a design charrette ensuring dialogue for underserved neighborhoods, Scully's top priority, like that of ULI's, is how to plan equitable outcomes for all individuals and their land, regardless of location.
